Forms of evaluation

At the end of the course, the students had the chance to answer a survey on the Canvas page.

Summary of the students' course evaluations

The students who responded to the survey seemed to have enjoyed the course and achieved the learning outcomes. One student commended on the examinations' increased sizes and found it pedagogical. One student wrote that the assignments were easy to understand. A couple appreciated the recorded lectures and that it made it possible to work in your own time. One student wanted more recorded lectures and power point presentations. One student required more literature.

Summary of the evaluations of the teaching team

The course have proceeded smoothly. A few students used the open office opportunity, this year we provided open office in the morning every other week and in the afternoon every other week. We propose to exchange some of the books and provide more articles of a more variety. We also find the need to include a book on gender theory.

Analysis

The open office should continue as before. Look into what lectures that are needed. The literature should be revised and include a book on gender theory and a variety of articles.

Action plan

Review the course literature.

Proposed revisions to the course syllabus

- Change Adair & Knijnik (2014) and Hargreaves (2000) for other books.
- Include a book on gender theory.
